In the assigned claim of Sam F. Webb, the former owner and principal proprietor of the Democrat until about three weeks ago. He claims there is due him for money advanced to the newspaper for payment on a linotype, for a motor, type and machinery, $2,342.20, and for his services $1,675.

The attachment papers were first taken to the office of the sheriff but Sheriff Cook before serving them desired first to consult an attorney. The papers were then taken to Constable Lee Redwine who served them and left Deputy Porter in charge.

This move on the part of Mr. Webb had not been expected. It was as sudden as his retirement from journalism which was also unexpected by him until it happened.

Additional interest is lent to the suit by the fact that not only is the Democrat the leading democratic paper of the territory but also by the further fact of the political prominence of the parties. The elder Mr. Webb is the chairman of the Democratic territorial committee and the present principal owner of the newspaper is the nominal leader of the party and delegate-elect to congress. It may be said also that his nomination for that office was made possible by Mr. Webb.

The appearance of both these gentlemen athwart the journalistic horizon may be described as meteoric. The weather bureau has long since quit trying to tell when they are coming and when they are going. Mr. Webb may be one moment apparently engaged in peaceful bucolic pursuits with nothing on his mind beyond the price of cattle or alfalfa. The beholder turning his back for an instant and turning again finds him enthroned upon the tripod wielding a trenchant pen.

It's the same way with Colonel Wilson. He may appear to be wholly engrossed with law or mining or politics and the next moment he is butting into journalism. Mr. Webb has spent the last two years either in ousting somebody out of the newspaper business or getting ousted. It was his turn last to be ousted and Colonel Wilson was the instrument in the hands of providence to do the ousting. Mr. Webb believes now he has come to a turn in the lane and that the colonel will have to go.

So far the colonel has lost nothing in a financial way in his newspaper experience. Every time he makes a dash into the field he gets away with something valuable besides experience, the only remuneration of most men who engage in the business. It will be remembered that two years ago the colonel came to the front in favor of the Enterprise in the height of the campaign season. When the season was over there was an understanding that the Enterprise had given the colonel value received. That was the understanding of the Enterprise proprietors. What the colonel thought of it was made known later.

A time came when the proprietors of the paper found an opportunity, of the kind that occurs only once in a thousand years, to sell out; the arrangements were all made, the money was in the bank and there was nothing to be done but to pass the title. At this instant the colonel came forward and announced himself as a silent partner, so silent that his partners had not been aware of his presence at all.

The pending deal was one that could not be allowed to go by the board and that was the way it was certainly going unless the colonel's claim was recognized. A. S. Mills who not only recognized a good thing when it was exposed to his unobstructed view but had also been summoned east by the illness of his father was impressed with the necessity of acknowledging that Colonel Wilson held a prominent place in journalism which was worth at the least figure $250. Then they went on with the sale of the Enterprise. Mr. Mills has often been heard to say that that was not a voluntary concession. Once when he was living in Colorado a stage on which he was riding was held up. He lost a watch and some money and he remarked when he was looking at the remains of the purchase price of the Enterprise that he remembered just how he felt after that Colorado incident.

GODDARD MURDER SUSPECT Casimero Rodelas Will Be in Phoenix Today.

One of the murderers of Charles Goddard and Frank Cooke has perhaps been captured and will be brought to Phoenix this morning. He is Casimero Rodelas and he has been in jail at Yuma for a week. He was identified yesterday by Sheriff Roberts of Yavapai county. A telegram was received at the office of the sheriff yesterday evening from Sheriff Roberts asking that some one meet him at the train this morning.

Rodelas was arrested at Yuma on his resemblance to the description of one of the Goddard murderers. It was afterward thought that he could not be that man but he was held until the arrival of Sheriff Roberts.

Whether he should prove to be one of the Goddard murderers or not he is certainly a murderer and was hunted for before the Goddard tragedy. His resemblance to one of the men engaged in that slaughter was so great that there was little doubt in the mind of Sheriff Roberts that he was that one whose name appears in the official description offering a reward. If he is the man he will be identified within ten minutes after his arrival in town this morning.

The crime for which Rodelas was wanted was the shooting of a Mexican in a Mexican saloon in Prescott five weeks ago. Some years ago he killed a cowboy at Clifton. He was at that time acting as watchman for the Arizona Copper company. The company assisted in his defense and the jury disagreed. When the case was tried next all the witnesses for the territory had left the country and he was acquitted. He is said to be guilty of other crimes since then. A distinguishing mark of one of the Goddard murderers is a great scar on the right side of his face. Before Goddard died he told his wife that he had been shot by the Mexican with the scar. His companion killed Cooke. Several Mexicans with scarred faces have been arrested within the last two weeks but in every case the scar was on the left side. Rodelas' is on the right side.
